In so vast a union of States, of such differing interests, habits and institutions, the danger of sectional parties to the peace and permanence to the Union, was early foreseen by the fathers of the Constitution. The Father of his Country, himself, gave voice to these apprehensions in his Farewell Address in which no tongue or pen has since improved.

He urged the "unity of the Government pressed upon the nation, that it was "a main power abroad, of our safety, of our prosperity, of the very liberty which we so highly prize." In a spirit of prophecy, he cautioned the people and their posterity against the dangers it might encounter, and with his whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of "one of the expedients of party is to acquire tricts." He forewarned us that "we could not shield ourselves too much against the jealousies and heart-burnings which would ought to be bound together by fraternal affection." Fearful prophecy, fearfully fulfilled! How the great spirit of the illustrious Wash-to foresee the full and terrible measure of the danger he foretold, the insane and terrible the American colonies were originally planted; social relations before the revolution, and therefore, of necessity, influencing their policy since they become free and independent States." The progress of all the States was great, but frequently in different directions.

But the Constitution left to the several States the exclusive control of their domestic con-vailed, differences of domestic institutions would never have disturbed the peaceful relations of the States in the Union. The slavery of the African race formed from the revolution too often is the end of its career. Unfortunately, among many elements of good and greatness, fanaticism emigrated to this country. From time to time, it has played its part in marring tha record of civil and re-ligious liberty in American history. It has, from time to time, sent forth various heretical dogmas of politics. It has asserted a higher law, above the Constitution itself. It has in recent memorable words, sought to do in the name of God what could not be done in the name of the Constitution.

It finally found employment fatal to the peace of the country in political abolition. The North had rid itself of the incubus of slavery. The North was as responsible for slavery in the South, as the South itself is. But fanaticism became offended with Southern slavery; and overlooking home evils and home reforms, it devoted itself to the discussion of the evils of African slavery, clamoring against its criminality and urging its abolition. It disregarded the Constitution, and denounced its guarantees of the rights of slavery as a compact of sin and shame. Many of its teachers openly advocated disunion; and many more proclaimed an irrepressible conflict between the domestic systems of the North and the South, arguing that the States of the Union must become all free or all slave.

Fanaticism at the North, unembarrassed by the presence of slavery, did not see slavery as a necessary evil, but only as an abstract wrong. It could make no allowance for the condition of the South, and had no toleration for the compromises of the Constitution, or the safeguards a sectional party.
